Piggybacking off the sentiment above, being part of a community and physically attending classes increases accountability. If a student does not feel they are getting the proper guidance, they may not have enough self-discipline to fully engage in the lessons themselves. Moving to virtual, real-time classes instead of just online courses gives a greater sense of accountability. Tools like live quizzes help assess understanding in real-time, while breakout rooms encourage group activity. These tools help foster accountability and keep students engaged. 3. Online Learning Requires Additional Training for Instructors Online classes imply an initial learning curve and extra effort on the teacher's behalf to create a successful online course. Instructors need to get a deep understanding of the different approaches to teaching and learning to avoid just replicating the physical class environment and miss out on all the added advantages and tools that eLearning and blended learning have to offer. Of course, instructors also need proper training to tackle the technical aspect of online learning: the use of video and audio recording equipment, virtual classroom and lecture capture software, and of course the Learning Management Software (LMS). The combination of all these new skills represents a steep learning curve for the teacher, but thoughtful investment in proper training will pay off tenfold for the institution, the teacher, and the students alike! The classic disadvantages of online learning center around technical problems. Nothing disrupts an online lesson more than audio, video, or connection issues. Many times in the past, students were required to download and/or install cumbersome apps or technology that would deliver inconsistent performances. Luckily nowadays, online classes can be accessed through the click of a link without the need to install anything. Internet connections throughout the world have improved dramatically. Additionally, people's devices have gotten significantly better. 5. Online Learning means more screen-time It's pretty much inevitable in 2022, but darn do we spend a frightening amount of time in front of screens. Online learning sadly contributes to this problem. Excessive screen-time can lead to all sorts of physical ailments like poor posture or headaches. But it can also be a personal issue to students who struggle with learning from or focusing on screens. Especially since the internet is geared to distract students with social media and entertainment just a click away from the learning material. The better online learning platforms and software out there have all kinds of tools and features to help students staying attentive and engaged. Internet is an evolving technology that constantly adds new features so that users can be more convenient with its usage. Since the introduction of internet, modern life of people has become easy and comfortable. From Bank, Healthcare, Business to Economical various departments are being benefited from the internet. In this article, let's look at the 6 Advantages and Disadvantages of Internet for Students | Dangers & Benefits of Internet for Students. Through this post, students will know the pros and cons of using internet. Advantages of Internet for Students The significant advantage of the internet is the information that it offers. Huge amount of information about various subjects are presented near your fingertips. It is not just about one single subject. This cannot be achieved without the use of search engines. Through this ease of information, students are benefited for their data research. Students today heavily rely on internet since they longer need to waste time by going to a library or finding books from a respective author. Internet is accessible 24x7 which means that it never closes. As long as the students are having a computer and an internet connection, they will be able to access the internet by any means. The accessibility of the internet has made convenient for the students to understand their subject better. Therefore, unlike a library students don't need to wait for an opening and closing time. The information are accessible whenever they need it. Students irrespective of their nations, races, religions and cultures will be able to communicate and express their opinions with other peer students. This type of communication is more convenient compared to other traditional ways such as telephone calls and letters. For the communication part, students can choose various forms like email, chatrooms, messenger services and videoconferencing. And also students can use forums to discuss about their subject matters with teachers and students in various parts of the world. For the students who are hesitant to express their doubts, could use forums and remain anonymous. Apart from studies, students can also use internet for the purpose of entertainment. From videos, music to games everything is made available on the internet. In the recent years, online gaming has become popular, particularly among teenagers. For students who study for prolonged hours, this internet entertainment is a great way to relieve stress. Gone are the days when people prefer to apply jobs using letters. Since the digital era, people started seeking job opportunities through the internet. In most parts of the world, job opportunities are made available for the students via the internet. Through this the students could find other career opportunities as well. And also during the study process, students will be able to stay updated regarding the job market based on their field of education. With the internet, students can also use the opportunity for online education. Certain universities offer virtual courses for students all around the world. This is especially beneficial for students who are located in a different country and willing to participate in the respective course. And for working students this is even more convenient since they could follow the course without any hindrance to their regular lifestyle. Disadvantages of Internet for Students Children these days have lost their communication skills mainly due to the usage of internet. Rather than interacting with people real life, children are more interested in computer communication. Interacting with people online differs massively from real life interaction. The amount of feelings and thoughts that is expressed in social interactions can never be achieved by a computer. The internet can also be extremely addictive to students. The students could spend too much time wasting on internet neglecting their studies. There are so much of entertainment options on internet that can make a student distracted from their studies. For an example, students could play online game prior to an examination where they should spend studying. This could seriously affect a student's academic performance. While using internet, students could be exposed to various forms of vulgarities such as Violence and Pornography. Adult contents are easily made accessible to underage children. Even though adult websites try to limit access to show their contents to 18+ audience, there is no trusted way to verify the user's age. And some online games involve lots of violence that can be disturbing to children. Therefore, students particularly teenagers could be exposed to such contents affecting their mental health. Even for a student's education, internet can be misused to promote laziness. Unlike a library where information could just be read, internet allows contents to be copied. In case of a university assignment or a school homework, some students simply copy paste information from the internet. From such an action students will never learn the key concepts behind the internet information. Not every content posted on the internet is from reliable sources. The information posted on the internet could be fake or exaggerating. Some contents are just created purely for the sake of misguiding visitors. Hence, it is the responsibility of the teachers to guide students to find reliable and trusted information on the internet. Students need to use a computer or a smartphone for accessing the internet. Using the smart devices for a prolonged period of time could contribute to various physical problems such as neck pain, back pain and eye pain.
